

The Birdie Fund

What is the Birdie Fund?

The Birdie Fund was developed to honor Birdie Minor on her retirement. The funds donated are used to help patients with speech disorders who may not have funds to participate in community based events designed to help them transfer their newly learned communication skills into "real life" activities.

Why Donate to the Birdie Fund?

People often ask how they can thank therapists for their work with family members. While we cannot accept gifts, we appreciate your support of our work. Donating to the Birdie Fund is a great way to support the programs here at WWRC and provide opportunities for other people with communication disabilities to participate in WWRC activities designed to improve their communication skills.

How Can I Donate?

Please make checks out to the WWRC Council of Organizations, with a notation for the Birdie Fund. Send to the Council at the address below.

Who is Birdie?

Birdie Minor served WWRC for 35 years as a master speech-language pathologist. A dedicated advocate for people with communication disabilities, she was responsible for developing unique group and intensive treatment programs for people with aphasia from stroke and brain injuries and for people with interpersonal communication disabilities associated with learning disabilities and brain injuries. She strongly supported a practical approach to therapy by encouraging people to participate in community outings and events to help them transfer new skills to daily activities.

THANK YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT!
